Forming Connections by Making Music!

Group music-making brings people together by providing a supportive and playful space for self-expression. It creates opportunities for teachers to connect with each individual, and connect the individuals in the group with each other.

Kath will be sharing her experiences of how making music together helps to foster a shared sense of inclusion and mutual support, to build communities within communities – including transient moments of Belonging such as at the children's hospital, that nonetheless can make a significant difference to a person's day and overall sense of well-being.

Kath Lloyd

Kath Lloyd has been registered with KMEIA since 2001, teaching the do-re-mi early childhood music program in her home studios and at various childcare centres in Brisbane.

Her current home-based classroom is in Annerley, and 2018 marks the 12th year of Kath delivering this program to the Margaret Cribb Early Learning child care centre (UQ). Kath is also the coordinator of the ECM program at the Queensland Conservatorium, which includes teaching at the Con and running weekly music sessions at the Lady Cilento Children's Hospital (South Brisbane).

Kath loves how musical engagement in group contexts supports the development of children's emotional intelligence and interpersonal skills, and to support her own ongoing development she is currently midst the Bachelor of Behavioural Science (Psychology) at QUT with the long term aim of undertaking the Master of Psychology (Educational and Developmental).
